IEEE 802.11 standard. From ZP, the IEEE 802.11 standard is derived in two modes: the first one is operating on the IEEE 802.11b standard (a terrestrial-based Wi-Fi) and the second one is operating on the IEEE 802.11n standard (a high-data-rate standard based on OFDM modulation). ZP can also simulate the IEEE 802.11 standard when a IEEE 802.11 network is established, for example at a building, hospital or university. It can also generate a power spectrum graph that gives us a visual representation of Wi-Fi signal strength in different directions, and it also has the ability to simulate physical changes to the building environment (using IEEE 802.11 equipment) such as adding decorations to the walls, adding furniture, adding carpets to the floors and adding tables to the desks.

Ruckus ZonePlanner (ZP) is a Wi-Fi RF simulation tool. which combines the antenna patterns of the Ruckus wireless access point with the industry-leading AirMagnet.ZP generates a diag antenna directivity ranges, taking into account their relative position and distance to obstacles. ZP uses this algorithm to determine the best location for Ruckus APs, both indoors and outdoors. This modeling tool allows you to determine the optimal configuration that will achieve the best match between access points, antennas and clients. ZP is an easy-to-use software. fffad4f19a
