Q: Where to put the get or set in a properly structured Hibernate model? I'm having a difficult time deciding whether to create a get or set method for some of my Hibernate model fields. I'm very new to Hibernate, so this is probably something very easy. Any help would be appreciated. Here are the two main attributes in the model. The RoomNumber and Description are int type fields.

@Entity @Table(name = "Room")

public class Room { @Id

```
@GeneratedValue(strategy = GenerationType.IDENTITY)

@Column(name = "RoomID")
private int id; @Column(name =
    "RoomNumber") private int roomNumber; @Column(name =
    "Description") private String description; }
```

A: If you are able to update the object then you should use a setter otherwise you should use a getter. The only time you need to use a setter is if you are doing some type of operation on the field, this would be an example:

private int roomNumber; public int
getRoomNumber() { return
roomNumber; } public void
setRoomNumber(int roomNumber)
{ this.roomNumber = roomNumber;

If you would like to know more about getters and setters, read the JAVA docs. You can use any names you want, and do what they tell you to do, it is really just a convention. When it comes to accessing your id, you can either use the getId() or the id() method. It really depends on how you wish to access the property. The getId() method will only be useful if you need to access the ID for some type of processing, or query in some way. You can use the id() method to get the property value without using the setter or getter, so if you only want to look at the value without any manipulation, then use id(). When it comes to naming conventions, just make sure that you follow what the J
