Description: Homepage: Homepage: Category: Category: Type: Type: Priority: Priority: Source: Source: ShortName: ShortName: I agree to the terms and conditions of this agreement. July 8th marks the day that the NFL owners unanimously approved the move to increase the number of players on the field in the regular season from 16 to 17. For years now we have been hearing the NFL owners and media paint a picture of a helpless NFL with no leverage in labor negotiations, forced to do something against their better judgment out of the fear of losing the game. So here we are, seven years later and the NFL owners have finally voted to accept that unionization is the only way to be treated as a truly equal member of the labor force. This move however, does not come without risk. If these negotiations fail as the owners have threatened they will, the owners will institute the so-called "cap" as well as other extreme measures in retaliation. But if the NFL owners are smart, they will not need to implement these extreme measures. Instead, the NFL owners have to offer something to the NFLPA, something the NFLPA's leadership just can't afford to turn down. With a 17th player, the NFL can simply split them into two teams of 10 and still have 11 games to schedule. They don't need to hire more employees or utilize more facilities. The NFL owners don't need to institute rules changes to the game. Instead, the owners can simply agree to leave all the players on the field. Instead of saying, "You have to cut your grass" they could simply say, "I will play you twice a year on even numbered years and you will have 17 players." The NFL can agree to all the ideas the NFLPA wants to set aside and instead it will be a free agent in every other case. In other words, the NFL owners can say yes to everything the NFLPA wants while agreeing to leave them all on the field, in effect, agreeing to a union. And if the NFLPA rejects that, the NFL owners can simply enact what are now their typical and standard operating procedures, such as instituting the cap and other measures to punish the union. The NFLPA can use this as leverage against the owners. When the owners institute the cap the NFLPA
